

Published by Japan Camera Hunter. October 2017

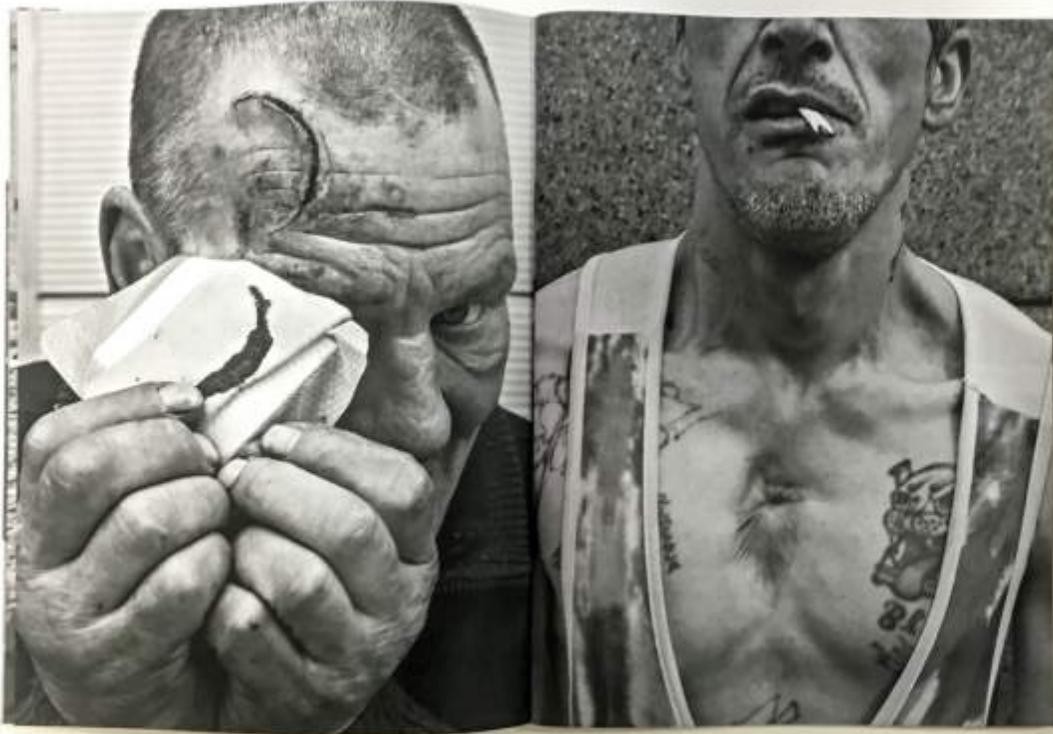

Nothing to see here by John Bolloten

"Nothing to see here" is anything but as it take you into the dark underbelly of central Bradford. These 64 pages of A4 black and white photos will smack you in the face with reality.

It's a bleak peak into some rough neighborhoods of England. Brutally honest, his subjects hold nothing back for his lens. It's an achievement how comfortable he makes them feel to give him such an honest expression.

A lot of the images can't really be featured here, as it shows some graphic drug use. Drug abuse's brutality is candidly represented as John gives us access to a grim world. Shocking, yes, but perhaps something that does indeed need to be seen. Limited to 150 copies.

For more information about this work you can go to <http://fistfulofbooks.com/product/nothing-to-see-here/>

Copyright Japan Camera Hunter 2017