

Simon Robinson over Fistful of Books has been a regular feature on the site, send a whole bunch of books from his wonderful company www.fistfulofbooks.com This time we have a really fun project, about peoples dogs patiently waiting for their owners.

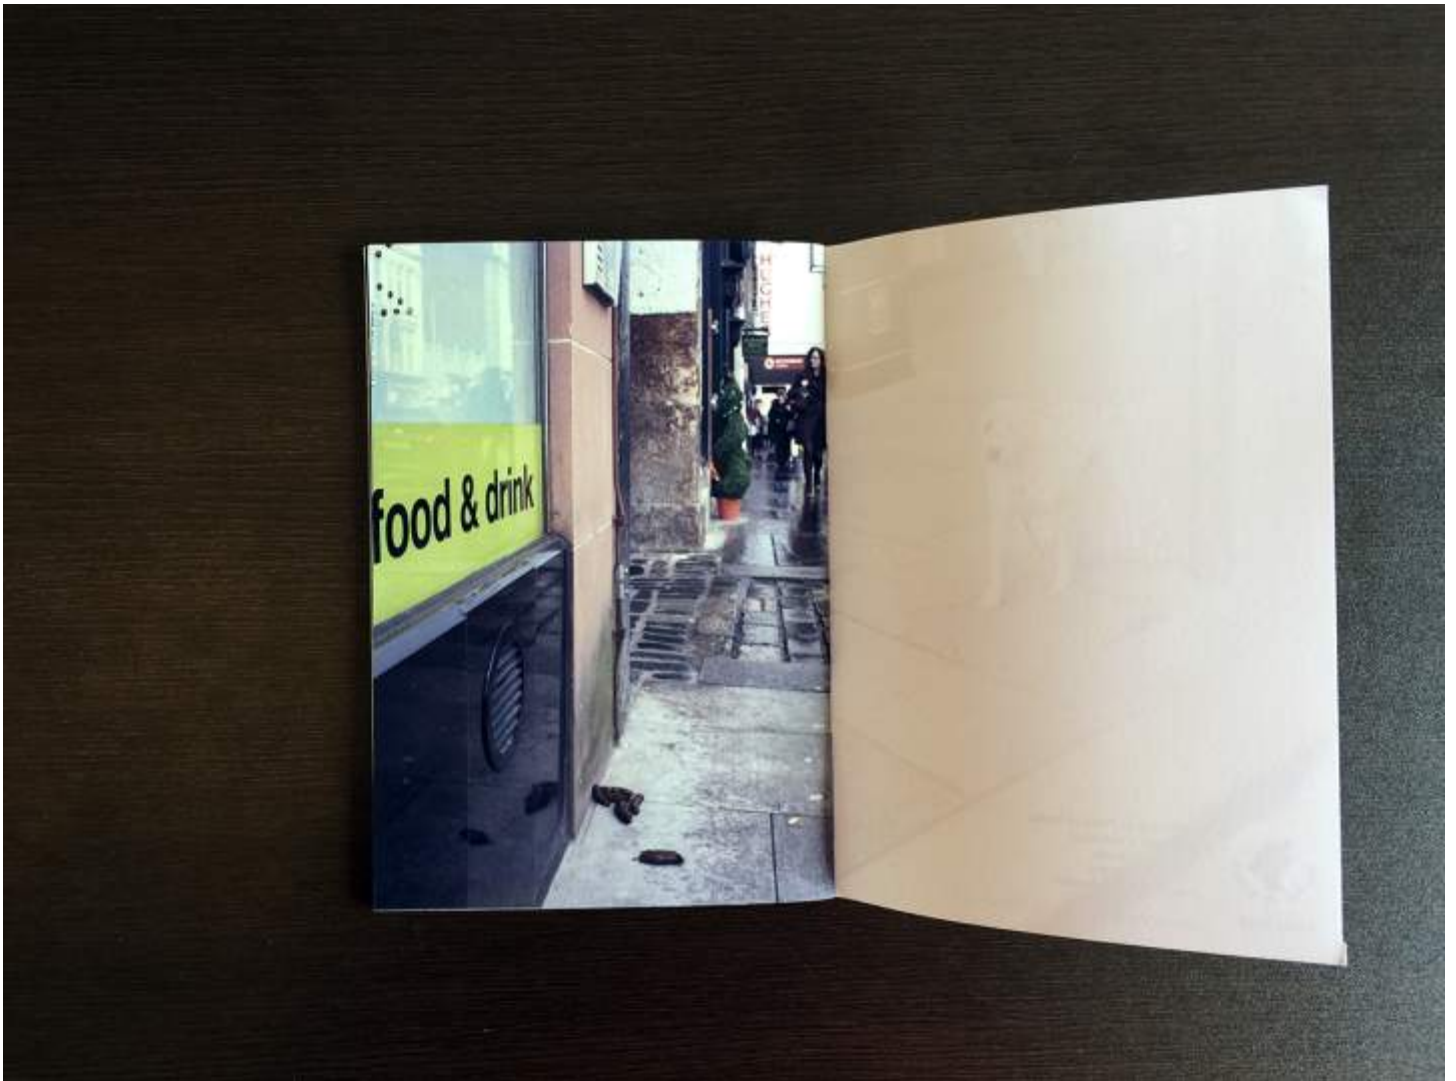

We all see them, but often walk past them without really looking. This project gives us the chance to take in how the dogs feel. Some of them look excited, anticipating their masters, others look forlorn, as if they are never going to see their master again.

The way the dogs have been framed really makes them stand out. They look so patient, so dedicated. You wouldn't see a cat doing that.

The final image is funny, almost like the dog is giving his exact summation of how it feels about having to wait outside on the pavement. And as it is the UK I am completely unsurprised that the poop has not been scooped.

You can grab yourself a copy of this one over at Fistful of books

Copyright Japan Camera Hunter 2016